Title
1 x Postdoctoral Researcher, ERC project "Atlantic Exiles: Refugees and Revolution in the Atlantic World, 1770s–1820s" (University of Duisburg-Essen)

Institution
University of Duisburg-Essen, History Department

Position
Postdoctoral researcher (f/m/d) at universities (Salary equivalent to TV-L 13)
The position is offered for the duration of three years (renewal of 1 year possible).

Responsibilities
The research project "Atlantic Exiles: Refugees and Revolution in the Atlantic World, 1770s–1820s" invites applications for one postdoctoral position (TV-L E13, 100%) to join the research team on April 1, 2021 or as soon as possible thereafter. The project is funded by an ERC Starting Grant, directed by Professor Jan C. Jansen, and hosted by the University Duisburg-Essen.

"Atlantic Exiles" explores comparatively the large-scale refugee movements set off by the revolutions in North and South America, France, and Haiti. Based on case studies from the Caribbean and the American continent, the project sets out to show that political migrants and refugee movements were at the very core of major transformations that the Atlantic world underwent during these decades. The project recasts the Caribbean as one of the world’s major receiving and transit region for refugees during this period, and it provides the first systematic combination of Atlantic history with the nascent research field of refugee history. In addition, it sets the findings from the Atlantic world into the context of the global history context of involuntary migrations. The project includes four sub-projects carried out by the PI, one Postdoc and two doctoral researchers. Each team member will work on one of three regional case studies, focusing on Kingston and the British Empire (sub-project 1), Havana and the Spanish Empire (sub-project 2), and Philadelphia and the early United States (sub-project 3), respectively. For more information on the project, its lines of inquiry and sub-projects, visit www.atlantic-exiles.eu.

Mission and Activities:
- to contribute to the accomplishment of an ambitious research project by conducting independent and coordinated research in a team;
- to work closely with the project leader, Prof. Jan C. Jansen, in the administration and direction of the project;
- to conduct archival research on one of the project’s sub-projects, specializing in a British Caribbean, Spanish American or US American case study (sub-projects 1-3); applicants need to identify one subproject for which they wish to apply;
- Guidance for project-associated doctoral researchers and research assistants;
- to write single-authored scholarly texts, present research outputs at academic conferences, and contribute to the organization of research dissemination events.

The successful candidate will receive social security benefits. Budget for archival travels, conferences, etc. is available. Team members will be integrated into a young, dynamic, and internationally well-connected research environment.
Requirements

- completed (or close to completion) doctorate in history, or related discipline in the humanities and social sciences;
- sufficient knowledge of the languages and areas relevant to the sub-project (US American, Spanish American or British Caribbean case study);
- excellent spoken and written English;
- international academic experience (study, research, conferences etc.) and/or experiences with digital history methods are an asset;
- proven ability in archival research;
- commitment to teamwork, excellent communication skills, and reliability to meet deadlines.
